Diplomat-Soldier School Is Urged

Murray Dyer, senior analyst at the Operations Research Office of Johns Hopkins University, said yesterday, "a national college should be established to teach soldiers the problems of diplomacy and the diplomats the problems of soldiering."

Speaking at a lecture at the Enoch Pratt Free Library on the subject of "Psychological Warfare," Mr. Dyer said that such a school would in the future prohibit the type of faux pax that the United States made in the U-2 incident.

"The diplomats need to know what the soldier is doing in order to prevent the release of four different statements concerning any particular incident," he said.

After calling the term "psychological warfare" a misnomer, Mr. Dyer outlined the necessary requirements to insure the effectiveness of it.

First, this very important instrument "must square with the national policy. If it does not the U-2 incident will be repeated," he said.

Secondly, the people of the country must be behind it. "You cannot say one thing and have another done," he explained.

Thirdly, this type of "warfare without shooting" must be based on action. It has to be used in support of the other actions of the Government.

Lastly, you must know exactly what you want from it.

In summing up, Mr. Dyer, the author of a recent book "Weapon On the Wall," said the only way you can measure the effectiveness of "psychological warfare" is by the response you receive after having used it.
